

State Frowns on Use of Present Shops for Vo-Tech

By STEVE CULLINANE

Pennsylvania frowns on schools using their present shops for new vocational education programs, a state official told Warren County School District board last night.

Albert Roman, area coordinator for vocational-technical education, told the board that he did not know of any schools in the state that use their "industrial arts" shops for new vo-tech programs.

The district school board is planning to start a program of vo-tech education; it is not yet clear whether this will involve construction of separate facilities for the program.

Roman said that in the past, vo-tech programs housed in ordinary school shops became "dumping grounds" for students unable to compete in academic programs.

Harold W. Landin, director of secondary education, reported to the board that the difference between a vo-tech program and the schools' present "industrial arts" program is as follows:

"The industrial arts curriculum is part of general education and not of technical, trade or industrial training. . . this is not vocational-technical training, since it does not seek to develop saleable skills."

Roman gave some examples of how much new shops for vo-tech studies might cost: for drafting and design, $12,000; for data processing, $200,000 (with $100,000 state reimbursement possible); for distributive education, $6,000; for machine shop work, $100,000; for welding, $13,000; for tool and die making, $125,000.

The board made two resolutions last night on a vo-tech program: they authorized district schools superintendent Thomas K. Barratt to contact two men who he said had shown interest in becoming vo-tech program director; and they voted to ask the county school board to approve the creation of a "joint committee" on vo-tech education. This joint committee would probably consist only of district school board members, Barratt noted after the meeting.

Roman told the board that the first step to be taken will be designating either the county board or a joint committee as operator of the program. The second step, he said, will be to hire a director to run the program.

"A director will probably be 'hard to find right now,' said Roman, since few men are qualified for the position, and vo-tech directors are in demand. Barratt did not mention the names of the men he is going to contact.

Roman said the salaries of vo-tech directors vary from about $11,000 to about $17,500 with the average about $13,000.

Curtis Sasserson, chairman of the Advisory Committee on Vocational and Technical Education, last night told the board that the committee has been asked "almost constantly" about the status of the vo-tech program since surveys on the subject were given the board last year.

Sasserson said, "We are most anxious that the board take the steps necessary to implement progress."

WARREN COUNTY

Warren County School District board last night took action on a proposed vocational-technical school program, adopted the 1967-68 school calendar, accepted teachers' resignations and approved employment of new teachers, turned the Pittsfield school and playground over to Pittsfield Twp., and made a number of other decisions. Warren borough council discussed the community antenna television system and learned that it is not committed to any action of a previous council. At particular issue was an agreement to allow the company to install lines, which are not insured as required by the original contract. Page One. An eighth ward councilman A. R. Railroad Merger Moves Up

(c) N.Y. Times News Service
WASHINGTON — The Interstate Commerce Commission tried once more yesterday to clear the track for the biggest merger in corporate history.

The commission directed that three of railroad's unwanted children—the Boston & Maine, the Delaware & Hudson and the Erie-Lackawanna—be adopted by the wealthy Norfolk & Western Railway. Thus it removed an impediment which the Supreme Court last March 27 placed in the way of the consolidation of the Pennsylvania and New York Central railroads.

The commission's order authorizing the Norfolk & Western to take control of the B & M., D & H and E.L. becomes effective on July 18. This means that without further legal skirmishes the Pennsy and Central could put their merger into effect by early fall.

In a separate decision yesterday the ICC ordered the Pennsylvania and Central to pay financial indemnities to the three small lines in the events their inclusion in the Norfolk & Western railway is delayed beyond the date when the Pennsy and Central merge. The Pennsy and Central already have agreed to this condition, which is not subject to judicial review on their plea.

The merger of the Pennsylvania and Central was authorized by the ICC on April 27, 1966.

Negro Riot Raging in Florida City

TAMPA, Fla. (AP)—Rioters moved out from the heavily guarded central Negro district last night, setting fire to homes in Spanish sections, stoning police and threatening to burn down the city bus barns.

And three miles away at Lake and 22nd streets, 400 Negroes smashed windows, throwing rocks at shotgun-toting police rushed to the area in paddy wagons.

National Guardsmen, under orders of Gov. Claude Kirk who was in the riot zone, held their tight bayonet-spiked cordon on the central Negro district where a full block of stores was burned during Sunday night's rioting.

"They're burning houses," radioed a policeman from the Ybor City section, where many Cuban families live.

Another officer radioed from southeast Tampa that a crowd of more than 100 youths were moving on the Tampa Transit Company bus barns.

"All the reserves we had were sent to Lake and 22nd," the police dispatcher radioed warily. "We have 400 people mobbed there and it's uncontrollable. We have no one to send."

Vietnam Escalation Under LBJ Study, Defense Sources Say

By WILLIAM BEECHER

(c) N.Y. Times News Service
WASHINGTON — The Johnson Administration is studying proposals that could result in a sharp escalation of the war in Vietnam.

High officials, whose attention was distracted briefly by the war in the Middle East, are again considering the scope of the bombing in the north and the level of American forces in the south.

One planner in the Pentagon explains the current thinking in these terms:

"We've reached a sort of midpoint in the war where things don't seem to be moving very rapidly. At such a juncture, there's a certain amount of malaise and honest puzzlement on what we ought to do next to achieve some kind of reasonable conclusion."

Some planners aid that a bit more audacity of the type shown by Israel last week might pay big dividends in Vietnam.

Gen. William C. Westmoreland, commander of American forces in Vietnam, has told Washington that he believes the enemy has just about reached the maximum level of forces it can maintain in Vietnam in sustained combat. He has offered three possible combinations of forces designed to exploit this opportunity, the sources say. These are:

—A minimum of one division or its equivalent, for reinforcement of I Corps, the northernmost region of South Vietnam, where the Marines, with three army brigades and various Vietnamese elements, face as many as four North Vietnamese army divisions. So far, American efforts in this area have been essentially defensive.

—Two to three divisions, to increase the forces in II Corps, particularly along the Cambodian border, and IV Corps, the Mekong River Delta country that now includes only two

United States Army battalions. —Four to five divisions, with the forces spread throughout the country. Two divisions—the Ninth Infantry and a new one—would be selected for the fighting in the delta. The others, it is argued, would help move to the offensive in the northernmost provinces and speed the pacification program throughout South Vietnam.

Authoritative sources say that the Army, already stretched thin from previous expansions, might be able to create two additional divisions from the standing forces, but that anything beyond that would require a call-up of reserve combat and support units.

The case for these different levels of forces is built on the assumption that the infiltration of war materiel and manpower from North Vietnam will not increase substantially.

But the Administration is also reassessing bombing policy. If it chooses to decrease

MEETING JULY 6

Council Discusses Cable Television

By BETTY RICE

Warren Borough Council last evening, after thorough research into the local cable television controversy, unanimously agreed the present council is not bound by what a previous council said.

Council in 1952 or 1953 passed a resolution granting erection of television lines in accordance with Bell Telephone provisions plus providing necessary insurance.

According to borough solicitor S. Knox Harper, the insurance clause has never been honored and the old resolution granted no franchise nor fixed any rates.

The current problem arose when Warren Television Inc. recalled original capital contribution certificates for considerably less than what subscribers paid.

During council's May meeting, the town fathers were asked by various petitioners in the borough to determine their stand in the matter.

A meeting is scheduled with the management of the TV corporation on July 6 (the first open date), to work out more details.

Council also unanimously approved borrowing $100,000 needed until 1967 taxes are received—a move not unusual in the annals of borough history.

The budget starts in January and the borrowing extends through September. To date the borough has received $20,000 as its share in the earned income tax which is collected through the county school district. It is estimated the eventual return will be $150,000.

The finance committee, however, plans to investigate the method of the borough's returns, which is one half of one per cent of earned income.

A resolution presented by Karl G. Timm, chairman of the public safety committee regarding restricted parking on the south side of Pennsylvania ave. from Market st. to the Glade bridge (up for first reading), to reduce an obvious traffic congestion problem, produced several suggestions.

Timm noted the new Red Barn on Pennsylvania ave. E. has created a traffic bottleneck. With 15 councilmen present only Dr. Robert Probst cast a negative vote for the resolution.

Timm requested that an additional caution sign be erected in the 35 mph speed zone in that area which is near Beatty field. He asked cooperation from the local citizens until such time as the state highways department might reduce the speed limit. If this works out, Timm said, the same procedure might be introduced in other playground areas.

The ordinance regarding extension of Conewango ave. and Lexington ave., also on the agenda for second reading drew four negatives votes from Joseph

Lottery System Bill Introduced

HARRISBURG (AP)—Senate Majority Whip Albert R. Pechan introduced a bipartisan bill yesterday to legalize flat racing in Pennsylvania and said this would be far more acceptable to the people than an income tax.

Shortly after Pechan introduced his flat racing bill, Sen. Thomas P. McCaresh submitted a bill that would establish a lottery in Pennsylvania similar to New York's lottery.

These were the latest developments in increasing sentiment in the legislature for some form of legalized gambling in view of the state's financial pinch.

Councilman Peterson Resigns Post

A.R. Peterson who has represented the borough's eighth ward for 7 1/2 years, has resigned his post due to ill health.

Peterson retired in 1958 from the Pennsylvania Gas Company after 40 years' service as foreman of the measurement division.

A native of Wilcox, Pa., he has been a resident of Warren since 1919. During World War II, he served with the 27th Engineers.

The councilman has been active in the Warren County Shrine Club and has served as secretary for that organization for a number of years.

His resignation from council and the Public Safety Committee was accepted last evening with regret.

Dr. Robert Probst, Peterson's fellow councilman in the eighth ward, said he was unaware of the resignation but stated that he would recommend Walter Austin, who was unopposed in the primary election, be placed in nomination for the post at the next meeting of council.

Israel Says Decisions Up to Them

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Prime Minister Levi Eshkol of Israel warned the world yesterday his nation alone will decide what fruits it will keep in the victory in last week's six day war.

Thus he served notice to the Soviet Union that strategic gains won at the cost of Israeli blood and treasure will not be yielded at the conference table. The Russians have been demanding Israel's army return to the lines it occupied before the outbreak of war.

"We alone are entitled to determine the nature of the vital interests of our country and how our interest must be secured," Eshkol told Parliament in Jerusalem.

"Let the international community be informed that the situation which existed until now shall not be allowed to return. The borders of Israel are no longer a no man's land open to murder and sabotage from without."

Israel's aims were not spelled out further, but it seemed safe to assume it will be unwilling to give up these points:

—Command of the Gulf of Aqaba, from which Egypt barred Israeli shipping in an edict that helped bring on the conflict. At the head of the gulf lies Israel's oil-importing port of Elath.

—Strategic heights over the Sea of Galilee, from which Syrian guns have shelled Israeli settlements almost from the day the Arab-Israeli war of 1948 ended.

—The west bank of the River Jordan and the Old City of Jerusalem, sacred to the Jewish religion.

—Possibly the Gaza Strip, from which Arab commandoes staged terror raids into Israel. Egypt had been administering the strip.

As Eshkol spoke, his government was turning to the problem of handling the 1.5 million or more Arabs they swept up in their swift conquests in Egypt, Syria and Jordan.

The U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees announced in Beirut, Lebanon, that food and medicine are being sent to Arabs in the Gaza Strip and on the west bank of the River Jordan.

The agency called for governments, voluntary agencies and private donors to send money or medical supplies to help the refugees.

Although bids for construction of the Oak st. swimming pool are to be advertised for opening on July 10, the borough solicitor reminded that actual construction cannot start until deeds to two properties involved are cleared. He said that there were no unsurmountable problems. Plans may be viewed in the office of the borough manager, Victor L. Miller.

A resolution commending the borough planning commission as the backbone of progress here and appointed by council years ago, Ray Marti mentioned Samuel F. Bonavita as chairman, Robert Kinkade, secretary along with Charles Frantz, Charles Cable and Jack Lutz.

Absent at the regular session were Ralph L. Barney, Dr. L.W. Krespan and A.R. Peterson, the latter's letter of resignation being accepted with regret.

Escalate

the bombing, military advisers are telling the White House, this will require still more soldiers in the south to handle the concomitant increase in enemy combat capability.

One reason the bombing strategy is being reviewed, the officials agree, is that the planners are running out of new targets. A few of the key remaining ones, they say, should be left untouched because of the need for future leverage against the Hanoi regime and also because of the possible repercussions in Moscow and Peking.

Military advisers have long urged the closing of Haiphong, the principal entry point for outside aid to Hanoi.

But such a move, some analysts argue, probably would increase China's influence on North Vietnam since it would then become almost totally dependent on overland routes through China for its war supplies.

There is also the much-debated possibility that China might choose to use such a step as a reason to enter the war, perhaps as a means of trying to unify its internally warring political factions.

Another bombing option, which is being given serious study, would decrease the bombing, concentrating on infiltration routes in the southern portion of North Vietnam and in Laos, with occasional strikes in and around Hanoi.

Some military men argue that such a lessened effort, over a period of time, would increase American casualties in South Vietnam if appreciably more munitions and soldiers were able to infiltrate.

Fierce Battle Breaks Out In Northern Provinces

(C) N.Y. Times News Service SAIGON — Sharp fighting has broken out again in South Vietnam's five northern provinces, a military spokesman said yesterday. More than 100 enemy troops were said to have been killed in several encounters Sunday with United States and South Korean units.

At the same time, three American Marine positions in Quangtri Province, which adjoins the border of North Vietnam, were blasted by rocket, artillery and mortar fire. Forty-seven Marines were wounded, but no deaths were reported.

The northern provinces have been the focus of increasingly violent attacks by North Vietnamese and Viet Cong units in the past two months. In mid-May, Marines and South Vietnamese troops swept into the Demilitarized Zone between the two Vietnams in an attempt to choke off these onslaughts. In the air offensive against North Vietnam, the spokesman announced that reconnaissance photographs showed that 10 MIGs had been destroyed or heavily damaged on the ground at the Kep air base during raids on Saturday and Sunday.

By unofficial count, the destruction of 115 enemy planes in the air and on the ground has now been claimed by American fliers. The figure corresponds to the estimated strength of the North Vietnamese combat air fleet when U.S. planes began attacking the north more than two years ago.

American intelligence sources state, however, that deliveries of MIG fighters, including the advanced MIG-21, have kept the air force at a strength of 100 planes or more.

The heaviest enemy casualties inflicted in Sunday's fighting in the I Corps area took place when a 50-man enemy force walked into an ambush by a 10-man Marine squad five miles south-east of Quangtri City. The squad was reinforced to about 40 men. Artillery was called in and helicopters sprayed the enemy positions with machine-gun and rocket fire.

When the enemy broke contact, the spokesman reported, they left 21 dead. Only two Marines were wounded. Paratroopers of the 101st Airborne Division, struggling through dense jungle 13 miles northwest of the guerrilla base at Ducpho in Quangnai Province, killed 21 enemy and found graves of another 14. Three paratroopers were killed and three wounded.

Missiles Found On Syria Front

(C) N.Y. Times News Service TEL AVIV — Israeli forces who conquered the Sinai Desert last week captured nine Soviet-built surface-to-air missiles, the first such "SAMs" to fall intact into non-Communist hands.

Disclosure of the capture was made last night at a press conference by four Israeli generals who led the attack on Egyptian forces.

Brig. Yeshayahu Gavish, commander of the southern front, said the missiles, which were model-2 SAMs, were captured at a secret Egyptian base between the Midia Pass and the Suez Canal.

Later, an Israeli official spokesman said, in response to questions, that there was "no evidence" that Soviet technicians had been at the base to help operate the highly complicated radar and other electronic equipment that guides the surface-to-air missiles, which are identical to those used against American aircraft in North Vietnam.

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Israeli military sources reported early today that five Russian officers have been captured by Israeli forces on the Syrian front.

They said the Russians acted as advisers to a Syrian artillery unit. The sources said the Soviets were taken prisoner Saturday when Israeli assault troops captured the hilltop.

SOOTY CITY CALCUTTA, India (AP) — A recent survey by two Indian scientists reveals that air pollution is a growing problem in Calcutta, India's biggest city. As much as 90 tons of soot is dropped on every square mile of greater Calcutta per month.

High Court Rules Against Wiretaps

By FRED P. GRAHAM

(C) N.Y. Times News Service WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court imposed strict new limitations yesterday on two police investigative techniques. It declared unconstitutional a New York law that permitted court-approved eavesdropping by police, and said that suspects must have counsel when they appear in police lineups.

The far-reaching decisions came as the justices ended the current court term by handing down decisions in 14 cases. The court recessed until Monday, Oct. 2.

In striking down the New York law, the court considered for the first time a statute that permitted police to obtain judicial warrants authorizing them to plant hidden microphones on the premises of criminal suspects.

A five-justice majority struck down the law because the procedures did not contain specific safeguards against violations of the Fourth Amendment. The Fourth Amendment states that searches can be made only upon warrants based upon affidavits "particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

The national call for 29,000 men was issued last Friday.

Voting to overturn the law were Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justices Tom C. Clark, William J. Brennan Jr., William O. Douglas and Abe Fortas.

Justices Hugo L. Black, John M. Harlan and Byron R. White dissented.

Justice Potter Stewart said that the law was constitutional, but joined with the majority in throwing out the bribery conviction of Ralph Berger, a Chicago public relations man who had appealed the case to the Supreme Court. Stewart said the affidavits used to obtain the eavesdropping warrant in the case had been insufficient to justify the installation of the "bug."

Berger had been found guilty in November 1964 of plotting with the owners of Playboy Clubs International and Playboy Magazine to give a $50,000 bribe to Martin C. Epstein, then chairman of the New York State Liquor Authority. In court papers the district attorney of New York County conceded that Berger would not have been convicted without leads and evidence produced by listening devices placed in two New York offices.

Five states beside New York have permissive police bugging statutes—California, Maryland, Massachusetts, Nevada and Oregon. The decision appears to invalidate all of these.

NO MALICE FOUND

Court Overturns Walker Libel Case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court overturned 9-0 yesterday a $500,000 libel judgment won by Edwin A. Walker, former U.S. Army general, against The Associated Press.

There was no evidence of personal prejudice, incompetency or malice in the way AP reported Walker's activities at the University of Mississippi campus at Oxford in 1962, Justice John M. Harlan said in the court's main opinion.

"We therefore conclude that General Walker should not be entitled to damages from The Associated Press," Harlan wrote.

All nine justices agreed that the judgment could not stand. Additionally, five agreed that libel standards are the same for "public figures" and "public officials."

The effect is to give the press broader freedom to report the activities of public figures involved in events that make news.

And the fact that all nine justices voted to reverse the judgment won by Walker in a Texas state court in 1964 strongly indicates that none of the 14 other actions instituted by the former general against the AP and various newspapers would stand up — if they ever reached the high court.

Walker has sought damages aggregating $33,250,000, claiming that AP had reported falsely that he "led a charge of students against federal marshals" on the Oxford campus.

The marshals were at the university to enforce an order by the U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans that James H. Meredith, a Negro, be admitted. Riots occasioned by Meredith's admission swept the campus the night of Sept. 30.

Harlan, joined by three other justices, said the AP's report of Walker's activities "was news which required immediate dissemination."

"The Associated Press received the information from a correspondent who was present at the scene of the events and gave every indication of being trustworthy and competent," Harlan wrote.

Further, the justice said, "considering the necessity for rapid dissemination, nothing in this series of events give the slightest hint of a severe departure from accepted publishing standards."

Keep Tragedy Out of the News

Small boats by the hundreds of thousands are back in the water this month, freshly scraped and painted after a winter storage.

In the deep South many boating fans are in the water most of the winter, but in most of the nation June is the season to get back on the lakes and streams.

Boating accidents are becoming more prevalent each season, as more comparative amateurs acquire boats and take to the water. This will be especially true in this area now that the Kinzua Dam is complete and the Allegheny Reservoir is full. Many have enjoyed boating on the river and the Conewago Creek in past years, but this season will see hundreds more taking to the water.

If you have a boat, and even if you think you know to handle it, play it safe; get a safety booklet and study it. Such pamphlets on boating safety are available in many sporting goods stores and at boat and motor dealers.

Common sense and good manners are cardinal safety principles in boating. Show respect for other boats, swimmers and fishermen. It doesn't take much knowledge of boating to know that a big lake on a windy day can be dangerous for small craft.

Know the capacity of your boat and don't overload it. Don't stand up or change seats in a small craft while it is underway. Make certain your boat contains life preservers for each passenger. Life jackets should be a must for everyone -- non-swimmer or not.

Only an irresponsible skipper will buzz a dock, wharf or anchored craft. You may miss. Reduce speed through anchorages. Your wake can damage other property. Avoid boating too close to water skiers, fishermen and other boats. Don't jump or dive from a moving boat. You may have the breath knocked out of you, or hit floating debris.

Stay within easy range of the shore on large bodies of water. Sudden squalls can play havoc with the unwary boatsman. If your boat overturns, stay with it. The chances are that sooner or later someone will pick you up. Very few individuals are in good enough physical condition for a long swim in rough or cold water.

Let's keep tragedy out of the news this summer.

Handwriting On The Suntan

(c) N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON—Skin specialists have now established that suntan is unhealthy. It's about time.

Among white people, they report, skin exposed to the sun ages more rapidly than skin that is kept under wraps. In addition, they report that skin cancer and excessive exposure to the sun appear to be related.

This news will cause nothing but joy among the palefaces of North America and Europe, who have for years been driven onto the agony of beach and rooftop at the height of summer to escape the social stigma of unboiled skin.

Now, after all these years, we all have the perfect alibi for retreating to the grape arbor when the outdoor seat heads for the beach. Going to the beach is unhealthy. It may even cause cancer.

Those with pale skin have known for years, of course, that sun was unhealthy. Flery necks and blistered abdomens brought back from thirty-minute naps by the seaside proved the evils of strong sun beyond a doubt.

The palefaces were, until now, however, unable to do the sensible thing and sit in the shade because of the terrible social reprisals which such sensible behavior invariably provoked from sun cultists.

These terrorists had successfully spread the myth that an unboiled hide made for an unhealthy body and, conversely, that a suntan made its possessor physically fit. There are few social offenses more odious in America than unhealthiness. And so—flery necks and blistered abdomens.

The sun cult has always been led by the leathery skinned people. These people—everybody knows a few—are coated in skin of such density that the most powerful rays are unable to penetrate and burn it. It simply turns brown. The longer they lie spreadeagled on the beach, the more their pelts come to resemble well-traveled suitcases.

A weakness of these people is their inordinate pride in the curious nature of their skin. They are particularly fond of displaying its impermeability to the pale skinned, by dragging them off to some sandy furnace and urging everyone to listen to the pale skin sizzle while he, the leathery hide, suffers no agony whatsoever.

This leaves the leathery-skinned with a pleasant sensation of superior health. Hitherto, the pale skinned have not had very pleasant alternatives to going along for the demonstration. If they objected that they could not stand the sun, word was spread through the community that they were peculiar. At night when parties were being formed to tell about the seaside roadhouses, they were apt to be left out.

Most of the pale-skinned took up tedious regimens of disciplined tanning—ten minutes exposure one day, 20 the next, and so on until they had browned to a point where they could take two hours of the beach without risking first-degree burn.

This did not, of course, save them from arrogant taunts that their skin was socially inadequate. The worst of it was the social obligation to tan, an obligation savagely enforced by whispering campaigns to the effect that girls without tans had less fun, that men returning to the office from vacation without tans had suffered illnesses and might be dangerous risks for promotion.

Sanity about sunshine cannot be expected to be restored this summer, or even next, but once the rapid-aging result of suntanning is thoroughly publicized, the summer cannot be far off when the girl with the leathery hide will start spending afternoons in dark rooms with a jar of skin chalk. After all, what man is going to want a girl whose skin may become senile at 29?

Middle Eastern Uncertainties

WASHINGTON—Two great, unanswered questions confront the President's Middle Eastern task force under the leadership of McGeorge Bundy.

The first question concerns the Egyptians and other Arabs. Has the noisy, sterile, self-destructive phase of "charismatic leadership" now come to an end because of the naked exposure of Gamal Abdel Nasser's poisonous mixture of vicious hatred, galloping self-intoxication and total basic incompetence?

In neo-colonial societies this phase always has to end before anyone can get down to serious business. The phase is a perhaps natural transition between foreign domination, which permits every ill to be blamed on the wicked colonialists and imperialists, and the often-painful fact-finding that is needed to build a new nation.

One must assume that this kind of transition is natural in such cases because it has occurred so often. Sukarno, bringing his people to the verge of starvation to feed his own exorbitant vanity; Kwame Nkrumah, doing precisely the same thing to the unhappy

Ghanaians; and Nasser, leading the Arabs into total disaster in an attack of near-lunatic egomania—all three are cut off the same piece of sleazy cloth.

Such leaders are "charismatic" because by feeding their own vanities they also feed the vanities of the peoples they lead. Having been dominated by foreigners for very long periods, these peoples are no more accustomed to practical fact-finding than the leaders they initially choose. But in the long pull the phase of this kind of leadership always comes to an end, simply because it has to come to an end.

It has to come to an end because the bills for all the vanity eventually have to be paid; and as the bills mount and the leader's egomania more and more closely approaches to madness, more and more average-sensible persons become more and more disquieted about their country's future. So the "charismatic leader" is eventually replaced by a Gen. Suharto or a Gen. Ankrak and a serious effort to put the national house in order at last begins.

This is clearly what is beginning to happen in Mao Tse-tung's China. And the prime question for the Middle East is whether this kind of shift in leadership is also going to happen there. As these words are written, Nasser's gesture toward resignation does not insure his departure. If he has gone before these words are published, it will be a very hopeful sign for the short run. Much depends on what happens to Nasser.

For the longer run, the Arab countries are bound to begin facing facts in the end simply because their own home situations will compel them to do so. But for the short run, there are also discouraging signs, such as the widespread Arab credence of Nasser's shameless lie about Anglo-American intervention. And all this in turn lends extra import to the second question facing Bundy and his co-workers.

This second question concerns the Soviet Union. Have the Soviet leaders been sufficiently disillusioned by Nasser's humiliating and disgraceful performance to lose interest in further Middle Eastern trouble making and to join with the Western powers in bringing some sort of order to the area?

It is completely self-deluding to suppose that the Soviets did not connive with Nasser before he attempted his grandiose power play. There is no doubt that they did connive; but they did so on the assumption, now shown to be wholly false, that there was something more to Nasser than empty, noisy rhodomontage.

These two factors, working together, might just conceivably lead to a joint Soviet-Western effort to encourage Arab fact-finding.

It will not be easy; but if it proves to be possible, this kind of joint Soviet-Western effort will be well worth paying for in some manner.

After all, the French, ever grateful for Marshall Aid, have been making grabbing gestures toward the Anglo-American oil investments. So why not the Soviets?

Computer Selects Careers

COMPUTER: Which of the following appeals to you most as a career choice: doctor, teacher, artist, chemist, radio announcer, corporation executive, social worker, ballet dancer?

STUDENT: I would like to be a chemistry teacher.

COMPUTER: Is there a chemistry teacher whom you particularly admire?

STUDENT: Yes, here in high school.

COMPUTER: What do you think you have in common with your chemistry teacher?

STUDENT: I like to work in a laboratory and I also like to work with other people.

COMPUTER: What special abilities do you have in this field?

STUDENT: I have learned quite a lot about chemicals since I got my first chemistry set as a young boy, and my best school grades now are in chemistry.

COMPUTER: Are you aware that there are dozens of other career possibilities involving both chemistry and people, besides teaching?

This is a hypothetical excerpt from an experimental project now underway at Harvard's Graduate School of Education to develop a model computer program that in the future could help millions of high school and college students choose suitable careers.

Ultimately, the computer system will contain masses of information on job market trends, future employment demands in major industries, required talents and training for different kinds of jobs, working conditions, pay to be expected, etc.

When this information is stored within the system, says project director Prof. David V. Tiedeman, a student will be able to ask the computer virtually any question related to his career. For example: what does a machinist do? What is the job outlook for missile designers in this city? Is a career in such-and-such field creative or routine?

Upon completion of the prototype system in about two years, the model will be made available to schools and research groups throughout the country which can further develop and adapt it to meet local circumstances.

Millions of career choices today are being made with almost no knowledge of all the available opportunities. So haphazard is the process of career choice, a University of Pittsburgh study revealed, that nearly three out of four high school boys change their career plans within a year after graduation. The vast majority of high school students today simply are not adequately equipped to make the best possible career choices.

The computer, the Harvard research team stresses, will be a tool to help a student realize the many complex aspects involved in a career choice and will help give him confidence in his capacity to chart his own career.

The Harvard project is just one example of a powerful effort throughout the nation, fueled in large part by research funds from the U.S. Office of Education, to find new ways to help students select and develop realistic, appropriate careers. In other projects, new vocational guidance techniques are also being developed, using closed-circuit television, "career games" and itinerant counselors with mobile libraries of guidance materials.

There is a tremendous economic importance in matching the "right" individual to the "right" career, in terms of the greater productivity of the individual and in terms of the greater output of our nation as a whole. And this is over and above the satisfaction the right career brings to any person.

Some Feel Sorry For Dodd

WASHINGTON—Discussion in Senate Democratic and Republican cloakrooms as the Dodd case debate starts indicates that the Senator from Connecticut will get about 12 to 15 votes. However, there is also considerable talk, especially among Democrats, about softening the charges against Dodd.

Some feel sorry for him. Some, on the other hand, are worried about Senate prestige and are mindful of the fact that a great majority of the American people, as a result of the Bobby Baker case and now the Dodd case, do not consider Senators honest.

It is our own conviction, after covering Washington politics for many years, that the great majority of the Senate is honest and that 95 per cent of the Senators are scrupulously careful in keeping campaign funds completely separated from personal funds. This is what Sen. Tom Dodd did not do. He even dipped into his official campaign funds to pay his own personal expenses.

Some Senators who want to soften the charges against Dodd have been influenced by Tom's statement that he has been condemned through "trial by press." Real fact is that for many years Dodd has seemed to believe that press critics were communists. "I can always tell when I'm hurting the communists," he says, "because the whole red network lights up."

He considers the red network, according to James Boyd, his former chief aid, to be the New York Times, New York Post, Washington Post, Providence Journal and St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

However, Robert H. Yoakum, a Connecticut author, has written a revealing article for the Columbia School of Journalism Review in which he says:

"If ever a man had reason to be grateful to the press, that man is Thomas J. Dodd."

"There are more than 1,400 correspondents milling around Washington, several hundred of them bona fide employees of wire services, newspapers, magazines and broadcasting companies paid to relay tidings of interest to readers, listeners and viewers throughout the nation," Yoakum continues. "It must be assumed that a corrupt Senator is a tidying of interest, i.e., news. But in the three months from the first Pearson-Anderson column on January 24, 1966, until the Ethics Committee announced hearings on April 29, 1966, the Dodd employees were interviewed by only two people: Sarah McClendon representing some Texas newspapers, and James Canan of the Gannett Newspapers which take in the Hartford Times.

"The wire services were no more energetic than the newspapers," continues Yoakum. "The AP stories were normally based on leads developed by others, and the UPI's dispatches often sounded as though they had been processed in Dodd's office."

"For eight years, he has been one of the most respected members of the Senate," a UPI background story reported inaccurately in April, 1966, compounding the error later in the piece by referring to Dodd as "a man respected for his views on foreign affairs."

"So much for our huge, probing, restless, truth-seeking news agencies," says Mr. Yoakum. "A Senator was up to his clavicle in ill-gained dollars, but the wire services were unable to spring even one of their 141 Washington reporters to interview the ex-employees who had the story."

Pearson

Yoakum deals in some detail with the Connecticut newspapers and the manner in which they ignored the Dodd story. One exception was Charles B. Lenahan, publisher of the Hamden Chronicle, who wrote a column in mid-April titled "Connecticut's Silent Press." Lenahan had just returned from a visit to Saigon. He wrote:

"Senator Dodd has spread all over the front pages of such disparate papers as the Bangkok World, the Saigon Post, Hong Kong's South China Post, and Tokyo's Asahi Evening News. This was a bigger story in the English language press of the Far East than it evidently was in the Connecticut press."

"This is a condition that has existed from the beginning of the Dodd revelations. . . There is no doubt that the (Connecticut) state press has held back on the Dodd story. The question is why."

"Whatever the reason, the newspaper-reading public of the state has been subjected to a remarkable example of non-reporting, of quite self-conscious evasion of an important public matter."

Yoakum got on the telephone to Connecticut editors to find out why they had not covered the Dodd case. He got no satisfaction. He assumed, he says, that "when editors learned of the serious charges against Dodd, they would have peppered Washington correspondents, stringers, or wire services with queries; begun an investigation of Dodd's office in Hartford; obtained interviews with the disillusioned ex-employees; found out whether state laws had been violated; written indignant editorials calling for a speedier and a broader Senate probe; followed up the fascinating leads that emerged from the March, 1967, hearings and the April letter from the ex-employees; printed the text of that letter (as the Washington Post did) and kept the entire staff alert to the fact that one of the biggest political scandals in Connecticut's history was in the making."

"This is an almost precise account of what the Connecticut papers did not do," concludes Yoakum.

"America's oldest newspaper, the Hartford Courant, was as spry as its age (203 years) in reporting the Dodd case," says Mr. Yoakum. "The Courant maintains a full-time Washington correspondent, Robert D. Byrnes, who has been with the paper for over 40 years and in Washington about 25. Byrnes broke no new ground, however, not even bothering to interview the employees who defected. The home office did no better. Local angles were multitudinous—Dodd's home office is there, so is his law firm, and so are several industries with whom Dodd traded favors, not the smallest of which is insurance—but the Courant missed it all."

"But just wait until that hypocritical, grafting showoff Adam Clayton Powell shoots off his mouth again," concludes Yoakum. "THEN you'll see the copy pour out of Washington and the Connecticut city rooms."

Dinner Crisis in Washington

WASHINGTON — The breaking off of diplomatic relations between the Arab countries and the United States may have catastrophic results in Washington. Because the Arab embassies in this town did most of the entertaining, it is now predicted that 70 per cent of all of the important people in Washington may starve to death.

An evening never failed to go by that one Arab embassy or another didn't have a sumptuous dinner or cocktail party, and since the same people were always in attendance, many of them have been cut off from their only decent meal of the day.

One society reporter in Washington, who never missed an Arab party, was found wandering in the streets, dazed and starving because she didn't have any place to go. The Red Cross has promised to take care of her until diplomatic relations with the Arab countries are resumed.

In the meantime an emergency committee has been formed to take care of the thousands of other dinner guests who were innocent victims of the tragic events in the Middle East.

The Department of Agriculture has offered to supply food stamps to anyone who can produce a canceled invitation from an Arab embassy. The war on poverty office has given out contracts to Washington caterers to provide hors d'oeuvres for famished Washington citizens and every effort is being made to relocate couples at other embassy dinner parties where relations with the United States are still good.

One idea which is still under consideration is that if the Arab countries do not re-establish relations with the United States, the Arab embassies could be turned into carry-out shops and people would be handed their food through a window.

Many people are blaming the Israeli embassy for the dinner crisis in Washington. "The Israelis knew when they attacked Sinai that the Arab embassies wouldn't be able to serve dinners very long. They were obviously helped by British and American waiters."

One of the surprising results was that before the Middle East crisis turned into a war, the Soviet embassy in Washington, which had provided all the caviar for Arab parties, had promised the Arabs that they would take over their entertaining in case the Middle East countries got into trouble. But now the Russians have backed away from their pledge and won't even give the Arabs a cup of sugar.

The United States, of course, is remaining mum during the dinner shortage crisis. A spokesman for the State Department said, "All we want is peace on embassy row. We will remain neutral in word, deed and thought." Later the White House said it wasn't exactly neutral and that although it would not get involved directly it was still pledged to help anyone who ran out of plates.

Pressure is being brought to bear on the Israeli embassy to fill the vacuum left by the departure of the Arab ambassadors and their wives. But an Israeli spokesman said, "We are a small embassy and even if we wanted to take over the task of feeding all the people in Washington who were formerly fed by the Arabs, we wouldn't have enough tablecloths."

This throws the problem into the United Nations.

One diplomatic observer said, "The United Nations cannot stand idly by and see so many people left hungry and thirsty and without good dance music. If we can't save the social scene in Washington, who can?"

Traffic Ticket Racket

(First of Two Parts)

HARRISBURG — The old Philadelphia traffic ticket racket involving the practice of socking upstaters with traffic tickets when not even in the city on the dates cited, apparently has come to life once again.

If it weren't for the utter seriousness of the practice it would be a joke of no small proportions.

For some reason the big city brethren on the police constabulary magistrates circuit in the City of Brotherly Love have the feeling that when they send a traffic ticket summons to we upstate buffoons, it's supposed to develop a case of the shakes and immediate compliance with the traffic citation — or else.

The tragedy is that seemingly it works too often, even though the purported offender hasn't been in the great village along the swamps of the Delaware in years, to say nothing of the date specified on the traffic ticket citation.

During the past year or so of the racket — it can be termed little else regardless of the platitudes of Philadelphia City Hall politicians — the minor judiciary brethren of this great city smothering Independence Hall apparently have taken to the phony traffic ticket racket once again in no small shakes.

We say "once again" because as readers of this column will recall it was back in January of 1964 that this column in a series of articles brought to statewide light the phony traffic ticket practice of Philadelphia. That series of columns plus subsequent columns citing instance after instance where upstate motorists had been falsely accused of traffic violations in the City of Brotherly Love (substantiated by sworn affidavits attesting to not having been in Philadelphia on the date cited) resulted in a "legislative investigation."

When we say "resulted in a legislative investigation" we mean that a joint House-Senate resolution was finally approved during the session directing the Joint State Government Commission to investigate the Philadelphia traffic ticket ratrace, with the specification that the commission "report to the next regular session of the General Assembly its findings and recommendations with drafts of legislation necessary to carry the recommendations into effect."

What happened? Well, this column, at the request of the Commission task force conducting the hearings, duly turned over the raft of evidence forwarded to this column by Philadelphia traffic ticket victims from up and down and across the state.

The next thing we knew the Attorney General (himself from Philadelphia) held a series of meetings with the Mayor of Philadelphia and allied bureaucrats, followed by the announcement that "all had been ironed out"; the racket would end with adoption of the new "system."

That was three years ago. For nearly two years thereafter the nailing of upstaters died down—but about a year ago the tempo of traffic violation citations began to pick up, to the point where now it seemingly is on a par with 1964!

What happened to the "recommendations with drafts of legislation" the Joint State Government Commission was supposed to make to the "next regular session of the General Assembly"?

A check by this column with the Commission shows that nothing along the recommendation or legislation line was ever done.

Why not? A Commission spokesman allowed as how "inasmuch as the situation had been cleared up by the action of the Attorney General, no such recommendations or legislation were deemed necessary."

Standing out today is the fact that the Philadelphia traffic ticket racket has started up once again — and the Joint State Government Commission (an arm of the Legislature itself) never bothered to follow the mandate of its parent body, the Legislature!

Court Upholds Butts Suit For '63 Grid Fix Scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court upheld yesterday a $400,000 libel judgment won by Wallace Butts, former Athletic director at the University of Georgia, against the Curtis Publishing Co. "Elementary precautions" were "ignored" by the Saturday Evening Post in its articles on the former athletic director, Justice John M. Harlan said in the court's main opinion.

And Harlan said the evidence on the preparation of the article "cast serious doubt on the adequacy of the investigation" underlying it. The award to Butts was based on a March 23, 1963, article in the magazine that said Butts had outlined Georgia's plays to Paul "Bear" Bryant, Alabama football coach, eight days before the 1962 Georgia-Alabama game. The court voted 5 to 4 to affirm the libel judgment, won by Butts in Federal Court in Georgia.

Justices Tom C. Clark, Potter Stewart and Abe Fortas joined in Harlan's opinion that said the Post "proceeded on its reckless course with full knowledge of the harm that would likely result from publication of the article."

The chief justice said the magazine had used "slipshod and sketchy investigatory techniques" in preparing the article.

Justices William J. Brennan Jr. and Byron R. White dissented, saying a new trial should have been ordered. Brennan said the charge to the jury was not in line with standards set down by the high court in 1964 in the New York Times case.

Brennan said the jury had been incorrectly authorized to award punitive damages even if it found the Post had acted in "good faith."

Justices Hugo L. Black and William O. Douglas also dissented, Black saying it is time for the court to adopt a rule "to the effect that the first amendment was intended to leave the press free from the harassment of libel."

According to the Post article, George Burnett, an Atlanta insurance salesman, accidentally overheard Butts outline Georgia's plays to Bryant over the telephone on Sept. 14, 1962, eight days before the 1962 Georgia-Alabama game. Alabama won 35 to 0.

Harlan said the evidence shows that the Butts story was in no sense "hot news" and Post editors recognized a need for a thorough investigation of the "serious charges."

"Elementary precautions were, nevertheless, ignored," Harlan wrote.

"The Saturday Evening Post knew that Burnett had been placed on probation in connection with bad check charges, but proceeded to publish the story on the basis of his affidavit without substantial independent support. Burnett's notes were not even viewed by any of the magazine's personnel prior to publication."

Harlan said further: "no attempt was made to screen the films of the game to see if Burnett's information was accurate, and no attempt was made to find out whether Alabama had adjusted its plans after the alleged divulgence of information."

Harlan said the writer assigned to the story made no attempt to check it with "someone knowledgeable in the sport."

Butts, who heard the news in Blountstown, Fla., while he was traveling through the Southeast for his insurance agency, said "I'm pleased. It has been dragging on a long time and it never should have happened."

"But since it did, this was one of those ball games it was nice to win."

Butts' attorney, William Schroeder, said the award "probably was the biggest libel award ever upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court," and he added that interest accumulated while the award was being appealed would amount to more than $100,000.

HOT HARRIER HOSED

With the temperature hoting around the 80° mark on the Eastern Seaboard over the weekend, Tom Laris of the New York AC found some relief while running the National AAU 26-mile marathon championship at Holyoke, Mass. on Sunday. Laris got a spray job as he passed a firehouse along the route. A top contender, Laris developed a muscle cramp and had to drop out with six miles remaining. The winner was Don Daws of Minnesota.

Gal Aspires to be Major Leagues' First Lady Ump

... FITTING EQUIPMENT HER BIGGEST PROBLEM

By FRANK MURRAY
WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — When the student umpire hunched behind the plate the first time yesterday, the only problem was squeezing the umpire into the chest protector. Especially with the fans whistling at the figure in blue.

"I'm having a little problem," Bernice Gerta admitted to Jim Finley, the man who trains umpires for organized baseball. "This chest protector just isn't made for my shape," she said. Bernice's shape starts at a 36 with the other numbers secret but in obvious proportion.

She is in the second of six weeks at Finley's $295 umpire school.

The 35-year-old brunette housewife from Jackson Heights, N.Y., wants to be the first woman to call a major league baseball game.

"First I have to tell her to stop being a woman and be an umpire," Finley said. "When she walks on the field I expect her to act like an umpire."

"She had the habit of carrying on conversations with the players but we broke that by giving her pushups."

It was Bernice's first day at the school last week. "Some of the kids talked to me and just automatically I answered," she said.

"Bernice, what are you doing?" Finley boomed. The girl umpire just blushed. The first rule of an umpire is not to chat with the players, Finley explained, prescribing two pushups for the first offense.

That's the same treatment he gives the several dozen men who graduate each year from his National Sports Academy to begin careers in the minors and local leagues.

After calling plays on the baselines in the days and studying rulebooks until 1:30 a.m., Bernice said, "it feels like boot camp must for the boys, but I'm all for it."

Apparently the studying took. On a 50-question exam, she got every answer right, Finley said. The final test will include 100 questions and passing scores usually average 86 to 98.

"I think this woman has good talent. I don't think they will be able to deny her a job because of her sex," said Finley. "I'm certainly going to see she gets to do some form of umpiring." Finley can be certain of that. He's president of the Umpires' National Baseball Congress.

"I had expected a tomboy when she signed up," Finley said, "but Bernice's every bit a girl."

The girl seemed no pushover for the players who protested decisions. "I've had a couple players argue on a call, but the call stands," she said firmly. "I don't think they even think of me as a woman on the field. I'm the umpire."

Bernice, wife of a freelance photographer, has been to Shea and Yankee Stadiums as a fan and columnist for the monthly Jackson Heights News. She hopes to return someday as the lady in blue.

"I'd have to be really qualified to umpire in the majors," she said smiling. "But I guess I would if I got the chance to."

"First, though, we're going to have to do something about this chest protector. I guess I'll have to have a special model made up for myself."

'LET'S GO FISHING' WEEK

Program for Junior Anglers June 17-23

HARRISBURG — The second annual "Let's Go Fishing in Pennsylvania Week" will be observed June 17 to 23, as proclaimed by Governor Raymond P. Shafer. Theme of the week will be "Take Your Family Fishing." Fishing is Pennsylvania's number one family outdoor sport.

At the proclamation ceremony the Governor dedicated the Golden Age of Conservation "Palamo Streamer Fly" and was presented a bass fishing rod fully equipped for the opening of the 1967 bass season in Pennsylvania on Saturday, June 17, 1967, at 12:01 a.m. EST.

A "Junior Fishing Champion" program will be inaugurated during "Let's Go Fishing Week" according to Robert J. Bielo, executive director of the Pennsylvania Fish Commission.

Under the new program, any junior angler under 16 years of age who catches a large fish in Commonwealth public fishing waters will be eligible for a Junior Fishing Citation Award and a "Junior Fishing Champion" arm patch, provided the following rules are complied with:

1. Fish must be caught in Pennsylvania public waters by legal methods during seasons open for the taking of the species involved.

2. Fish must be measured, weighed and recorded by a fishing license issuing agent or tackle store within the state by the owner, manager, or an authorized agent of the respective establishment.

3. Only fishing citation applications received within 90 days from the date of the catch will be honored.

Photographs are desirable as further proof of the catch, but are not required. As many or the photographs as possible will be published in the Pennsylvania Angler, the Commission's official monthly magazine.

Full details and an application blank will be included in the Pennsylvania Angler. Application blanks will also be distributed to fish wardens, license issuing agents, tackle stores and outdoors writers. The applications may also be secured directly from the Fish Commission in Harrisburg.

Personnel of the Commission will determine the validity of each entry

Doe Tag Gripe

Well, the Pennsylvania Game Commission is at it again. Without either rhyme or reason they have once again allotted a greater number of antlerless deer licenses (doe tags) to Warren County than to any other county in the state. Is this nefarious practice becoming a habit with them?

Time and again I have been told that the commission has a definite policy when it comes to allotting the doe tags to the various counties. The number for each county is determined on the reported buck kill, field reports of the wardens, highway kills and a few lesser considerations, they claim.

Therefore, if they have based the 15,850 doe tags allotted to Warren County for the 1967 season on our reported buck kill, I can prove them wrong. If they have based it on the report of our local wardens, Titus and Parr are farther off base than I have ever thought them to be. And if they based it on our highway kills, I can assure them that our local drivers aren't making a game out of knocking off the government mooseys.

The one factor the commission fails to list in the items considered in allotting the tags, it seems to me, is politics. And if I am any judge of comparative facts I think they should.

Although I could select a dozen other counties to use in making a comparison, I am going to stick to just one — Clearfield County. This is my home grounds and I know conditions there as well as I know them in Warren County, and I know the sources of political pressure better.

I could go back several years to start my comparison, but that isn't necessary to prove the point I am trying to make. I will start with the allotments made in June of 1964. A check of the reported kills (bucks) for the previous season (1963) shows that Clearfield had 1842 and Warren County had 968. Yet Clearfield County was allotted only 6,700 doe tags to Warren County's 8,350 for the '64 season.

And while the doe kills in '64 were proportionate to the number of doe tags in the two counties, Clearfield County came in with a buck kill of 1,537 and Warren County a buck kill of 1,316.

It must have been the tremendous hunter success (?) of the Warren County hunters that influenced the Game Commission to allot the following June a whopping 9,000 — the highest allotment in the state — to Warren County while Clearfield County drew a slim 5,000 for the 1965 season.

That year Clearfield harvested 2,596 bucks and Warren County tailed in with a kill of 1,685. Again the doe harvest was in proportion to the number of doe tags allotted.

Also that year, I wrote a column similar to this. I wasn't backward in pointing out the counties that should have had more of the doe tags than Warren County, and said specifically why I thought so. Whether it did any good or not, I can't say. But I can say that when the allotments were made in June of 1966 Warren County had dropped to 10th place on the list.

Even Clearfield County (and Potter, Lycoming, Centre, and McKean) had been upped above the Warren County allotment of 10,050. And other counties that had drawn my fire were either above Warren County or only slightly below. In short, the allotments last year made some sense.

So what happened? Clearfield's buck kill still topped the two thousand mark (2,027) while Warren County came in with a weak 1,368. And again the doe kill in each county was proportionate to the tags issued.

These are the figures that prompted the Pennsylvania Game Commission to: (1) increase the number of doe tags in Warren County to 15,850? and (2) drop the Clearfield County allotment to 10,350?

I wonder if the Game Commission even considered these figures in making this year's allotments. A quick survey of the various interests involved in our current deer problem is not too convincing. Especially when you get around to the counties throughout this part of the state where timber management and recreational advantages are added up on a cash register tape.

I would not go so far as to say that the 15,850 doe tags are too many for Warren County. We need the deer herd thinned out and I favor a drastic reduction to protect what range we have left. But I do say that there are at least a half-dozen other counties that should be higher on the list — and my pet peeve in this respect, Potter County, is one of them.

But that Potter County has a drag. While it has been the top county for buck kills since away back when, it hasn't topped the list of doe tag allotments since 1964. Its buck kill last year was 2,525 and its doe kill was 2,602. That's the way they like it in a county that specializes in collecting several thousands of dollars yearly from the hunters.

Warren County should be so lucky!

"COMBAT DELINQUENCY" Convicts Saving Young Offenders

By WILLIAM DICKSON
 Johnstown Tribune-Democrat
EBENSBURG, Pa. (AP)—The cellblock of a county jail is about the last place you would expect to find anyone who is interested in combating juvenile delinquency.
 But two Cambria County Jail inmates, each with long criminal records, say they sincerely want to do what they can to help young people avoid a life of crime.
 "We realized too late that we have messed up our lives and in the process have hurt innocent people," the prisoners said in a letter to a newspaper. "However, we are very much concerned with the youth of America."

Senate Today Hears Censure of Dodd

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the vexing problem of money in politics involved, the Senate opens debate today on a resolution to censure Sen. Thomas J. Dodd for financial misconduct.
 The principal charge on which the Senate ethics committee recommended censure of the Connecticut Democrat is that he used political funds for personal expenses.
 In a second count the six-member bipartisan panel found that in seven instances Dodd billed both the Senate and private organizations for travel expenses on speech-making trips. Dodd says these duplications were due to book-keeping errors in his office.
 The committee's finding and its proposed resolution to censure Dodd for conduct that "tends to bring the Senate into dishonor and disrepute" capped a 14-month investigation.
 Dodd said as the debate approached that he has to be optimistic about the outcome "because I believe I'm right."
 The ethics committee met yesterday and after its session Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., said "we'll stand firm." Another member, Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney, D-Okla., also told newsmen there is no disposition to compromise.
 The ethics committee's report to the Senate on April 27 said Dodd had used at least $116,083 in politically raised funds for his personal benefit. The committee said this was

Rotarians Hear English Librarian

Speaker at Rotary Club meeting yesterday was Margaret Sullivan, M.A., children's librarian in Stevenage, England, who is here as exchange librarian with Miss Anne Lesser, of Warren Public Library, who is working in Stevenage.
 Miss Sullivan was introduced by Everett Borg. She traced the chequered history of her hometown of Bath, noting excavations of Roman baths built while Rome's legions occupied England. These were heated with hot air forced through channels underneath the baths.
 In the 18th Century Bath became a fashionable center, and the entire city was rebuilt under plans by a group of architects. The mineral springs, and the healing virtues of the waters, brought many to the city, and a visit by Queen Anne established Bath as "the" place to go, and fashionable social life made it a center possibly rivaled only by Brighton.
 During World War II, Bath experienced something of a revival, with the removal of the Admiralty to that city, in a program to decentralize the British government agencies.
 The town of Stevenage, is an entirely new town, built at an old village near Bath beginning in 1949. About 60,000 people live there, mostly younger people with small children. This makes a tremendous demand on the children's library.
 Miss Sullivan answered a number of questions from Rotarians, contrasting life in Warren and in Bath and Stevenage.

South Vietnam Releases 39 Prisoners of War

(C) N.Y. Times News Service
 SAIGON — South Vietnam released 39 seriously sick and wounded prisoners of war yesterday in an American-backed gesture aimed at persuading North Vietnam to reciprocate.
 Informed sources said the release was prompted by the United States government, which has become increasingly worried over reports and photographs of American fliers who have been shot down over North Vietnam and paraded through Hanoi streets.
 The North Vietnamese prisoners, including a captive Viet Cong woman entertainer and her three-month old baby, were released at the bridge over the Benhai River, which separates the North and South sectors of the Demilitarized Zone.

'BLACK POWER' ADVOCATE

Carmichael Jailed in Alabama Riot

PRATTVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Stokely Carmichael, whose arrest touched off a gun fight between Negroes and police, refused to post bond yesterday until 10 other Negroes charged with inciting a riot are released. The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee in Atlanta called Carmichael's arrest a "declaration of war" on Negroes.
 Carmichael, former chairman of SNCC, was arrested Sunday and charged with disorderly conduct. There followed a night of racial turmoil and gunshots in a Negro section of Prattville called Happy Hollow.
 Carmichael's bond was set at $500 after a brief hearing in the courthouse, where he was escorted from the jail by four state troopers and two National Guardsmen.
 An attorney said Carmichael would remain in jail until bond is granted 10 Negroes arrested on charges of inciting to riot.
 In Atlanta, SNCC Chairman

Rap Brown said he considered it appropriate that Alabama has been chosen as "the starting battleground" for what he called "America's race war."
 Brown said he feared for Carmichael's life, but he declined to say whether he planned to come to Prattville.
 Sheriff Phillip Wood said most of those arrested at the house gave out-of-town addresses and "many said they were with SNCC." The sheriff declined to identify the arrested men.
 Negroes in the house had exchanged shots with city, county and state law enforcement officers during the night after Carmichael's arrest. Other shots came from a nearby wooded area, police said.
 Three officers were hurt slightly in the gun battle. Shotgun pellets struck three patrol cars.
 In Atlanta, Brown called upon Negro soldiers in Vietnam to "come home to the defense of their mothers and families."

Motorist Charged In Fatais

Two charges were filed Saturday against the operator of the car which struck and killed two teenagers while they were riding a motorbike early Friday morning on Route 8 just north of Franklin.

David Martz, 25, of Reno, was charged with two counts of involuntary manslaughter, and driving during suspension by state police of the Franklin substation. He was arraigned Saturday before a justice of the peace.

Martz was confined to Venango County jail Saturday and released a few hours later on $10,000 bond.

Martz told state police, who investigated the double fatal accident, at 1:30 a.m. Friday that he did not have an operator's license. A later check with the Bureau of Traffic Safety revealed Martz had been driving during a period of suspension.

Martz's car, which police said was traveling at a high rate of speed, smashed into the cycle and carried it over 400 feet down the highway. Killed were Nancy Johnson 17, of Franklin and John Charles Jones, 17, of Polk.

They were the eighth and ninth persons to be killed in Venango County this year.

Hungry Little Leaf-Eaters

These are the inchworms, or cankerworms, which have been chewing on trees in the county for three spring seasons. They can be killed with proper use of insecticides, the county extension office said. The worms will not kill healthy trees, experts say, but they will defoliate them for a few weeks. County extension agent Bernie Wingert offers advice on control of the pest in the accompanying story. FOOD PLAN HAS DRAWBACKS

Stamps Cause Concern

While Warren County is probably about a year away from participation in the food stamp program, many families who depend on surplus food each month to help make ends meet are concerned about the idea.

Many persons involved in the surplus food program here feel the food stamp approach defeats the purpose of the former plan. It is also possible that a food stamp program could work a real hardship on some low-income families since it involves a bi-monthly outlay of cash from already strained budgets.

Under the food stamp program it is claimed low-income families can buy better foods and more food in order to have more satisfying and better balanced meals. They may also select the foods they want thus increasing business for food outlets in a county and thus help other businesses too.

Families pay for some food coupons and at the same time get extra ones free and are able to buy more food. But they must buy and pay for some coupons twice a month in order to get the free coupons. The amount of coupons purchased and the amount received free depend on the amount of income and size of the family.

For example, a family of four with a $120 net monthly income must buy $26 worth of coupons twice a month in order to get $16 worth of coupons free each time. That leaves just $68 a month to cover other costs of living.

Some elderly people, receiving $170 a month from Social Security, who can prepare several meals from surplus food which costs them nothing, may find it difficult to meet ends under the food stamp program and some live in near poverty conditions as it is.

In Clarion County, the parents of 10 children, under surplus food distribution, this month, for example, took home 60 pounds of flour, a sufficient amount of powdered milk to make 96 quarts of milk, 12 pounds of rice, 24 pounds of beans, four pounds of peanut butter, 16 pounds of margarine 12 pounds of shortening and 12 cans of meat.

In the food stamp program a family of 10 with a $400 net monthly income must buy $59 worth of coupons twice a month to get $24 worth of free coupons each time. The coupons must be bought and paid for each time or apply again before being permitted to buy any more.

Theoretically the food stamp program is supposed to eliminate the problem of finding surplus food in the garbage dump.

William Karns, surplus food director for Warren County, stated that surplus food is put to good use and not thrown away by recipients. He said each recipient fills out a refusal form during each distribution, noting items not needed or wanted and duly signed by the person on surplus food rolls.

Many other counties, however, have entered into the food stamp plan in the past year.

Inchworm Outbreaks Reported in County

The inchworm, which has munched on county trees for the past two years, is back again this spring, the county extension office said yesterday.

County agent Bernie Wingert said he has received numerous telephone calls about the canker worms, as they are officially called.

He offered this advice for spraying trees around the house:

+ A single, well-timed spray gives best control.

+ Use only one insecticide: Carbaryl (Sevin), 2 pounds of 50 per cent WP, in 100 gallons of water -- which amounts to 2 tablespoons in one gallon of water.

+ Lead Arsenate, 3 pounds to 100 gallons, or 2 tablespoons to one gallon of water. Methoxychlor, 2 pounds of 50 percent WP, or 2 tablespoons to one gallon of water.

DDT is also used, 2 pounds of 50 percent WP to 100 gallons, or 2 tablespoons to one gallon of water.

Wingert said it is advisable, according to Entomology Extension service, to add miticide such as Aramite, Kelthane or Oxy when using DDT or Carbaryl or Methoxychlor, to avoid mite problem later in the season.

"Use according to directions on the container -- this is very important," Wingert said.

Trees that are completely defoliated, he says, will very likely grow new leaves as the summer progresses. Penn State specialists say only weakened trees in poor health will not survive.

Cankerworms destroy foliage of many forest, shade and fruit trees. Repeated defoliation prevents these trees from growing normally and may weaken them so they become susceptible to other insects or diseases.

Cankerworms are also known as loopers, inchworms, and measuring worms, because they crawl by arching their bodies high and pulling their hind legs to meet their forelegs. Two common species are known as fall cankerworm and spring cankerworm, because of the season when the moth emerges. Although the adult moth emerges at different times, the larvae, or cankerworms of both species, appear at the same time. Both species may actually be present on the same tree. Cankerworm moths are brownish-gray in color; females are wingless, males have a wingspread of about one inch. Eggs of fall cankerworm are deposited in late fall or early winter. Spring cankerworms deposit their eggs mainly during March and April. Cankerworms usually make their appearance in late April or May. There is only one generation a year.

Study of Soils Set Next Month

Dr. Roy P. Matelsky, director of Pennsylvania State University Soils Laboratory, together with Prof. Robert Cunningham, other faculty members and a team of undergraduate students from the School of Agriculture, will be in the Warren area the week of July 9 to make special soil studies.

James R. Cerutti, of the Warren County Soil Conservation Service office said the group plans to make studies of seven different soil types in a program which has continued over the past eight years.

The work is supplementary to the continuing soil survey of Warren County which will constitute a part of the soil survey of the entire state of Pennsylvania in the program to inventory the soil types of every acre of the surface of the entire United States.

Such soil studies are not only valuable to land owners, but are vital to engineers, architects, political subdivisions, planning organizations, but will facilitate soil resource studies in institutions of higher learning.

Cerutti observes that particular importance is given today to the clay mineralogy studies involved in the general survey. The Pennsylvania State University Soils Laboratory field study group will at various points make at least seven excavations measuring 6 ft. by 6 ft. by 6 ft., to determine horizons, textures, colors, degree of acidity and clay mineralogy.

Out of each pit will be prepared a "soil monolith" representing a four-foot vertical cross section, about six inches wide, showing successive layers or horizons of types of soils from surface to the depth of the excavation. These soil samples are treated with a clear plastic which renders them more permanent for display and study at conferences, meetings and classes.

Warren Resident Attending Academy

Sgt. Paul F. Dell, Troop E Erie, Pennsylvania State Police and a Warren resident has been selected to attend the Pittsburgh Police Academy in Pittsburgh this week and next.

Dell, with other police officers, will attend classes dealing with handling of juveniles. The PSP, being the most diversified police department in the United States, feels that certain officers should be selected for this type of work. State police are trying to extend the program already in operation and improve and make changes for the better in regard to police departments doing their share of the work.

The school conducted at the Pittsburgh Police Academy has instructors and police personnel from every section of the state. Some of the instructors are Harry More, Department of Law Enforcement, Indiana University; Dr. Stanley Morgenthaler, Western Diagnostic and Evaluation Center, Pittsburgh; Dr. Donald G. Lederman, Clinical Psychologist, Department of Public Instruction, Harrisburg and Dr. Joseph Eaton, Professor of Social Work, University of Pittsburgh.

(Ropp Studio)

St. Luke's Catholic Church Setting For Nuptial Vows

Mary Sue Stec and John N. Bosko exchanged their wedding vows in St. Luke's Catholic Church, Youngsville on Saturday, June 3, at 11 a.m. The Rev. Father Norman Smith, of St. Joseph Catholic Church, read the double ring rites. Karen Giegerich provided wedding music at the organ, and Donald Aberg was the soloist.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stec of Garland, and the groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Adam Bosko of R.D. Youngsville. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of white peau taffeta styled in a Directoire silhouette with the empire waistline defined with Alencon lace, bateau neckline and kabuki sleeves encircled with the lace, which was also used at the hemline of the slim skirt. Appliques of the lace secured the voluminous diva train which swept to chapel length. Her bouffant veil of imported silk illusion was caught to a pert bow and cluster of pearlized orange blossoms. Her cascade bouquet of miniature white carnations, pink rosebuds and baby's breath had streamers of ivory.

The maid of honor, Miss Pat Stec, cousin of the bride, from Corry, was in a gown of blue linen and matching bow head-piece with butterfly veil, carried a bouquet of blue and white daisies. Gowned similarly were the bridesmaids, Miss Barbara Stec, sister of the bride, Miss Bonnie Anderson and Miss Connie Anderson of Youngsville. The flower girl, Mistress Joanne Mitchell, a cousin of the groom, wore a frock of mist blue with matching hairbow and carried a basket of white and yellow daisies.

The best man was Chuck Sample, and ushers were Russell Bosko, brother of the groom, Joseph Stec, brother of the bride, and Steven Meleen.

The mother of the bride chose an aqua lace dress with matching accessories, and a corsage of yellow roses and miniature carnations. The mother of the groom was in a two-piece navy and white ensemble, and had a corsage of pink roses and miniature carnations. Mrs. Izador Stec and Mrs. Mary Pillar, grandmothers, both had corsages of white carnations.

A reception was held in the Knights of Columbus Hall, Warren, with four hundred guests in attendance. Decorations were carried out in the blue and white theme. Aides were Miss Sharon DeVore, Miss Barb Sobock, Miss Karen Font, Mrs. Marilyn Nagurny, Mrs. Lena Font and Miss Carol Stec.

For a wedding trip to the Thousand Islands, the new Mrs. Bosko wore a gold and white suit with white accessories and the pink rose corsage from her bridal bouquet.

Mr. and Mrs. Bosko are now at home to their friends, at 213 High street, Youngsville.

Pre-nuptial affairs were given by Connie and Bonnie Anderson; Mrs. Susan Hannold; Mrs. Frances Rafalski; Mrs. Jo Kuzmiski; Mrs. Thelma Kushner; Mrs. Marie Sobock; Mrs. Alice Kushner; Mrs. Stella Fill. The rehearsal dinner was hosted by the parents of the groom at their home. The bridesmaids luncheon was held at The Driftwood, Jamestown.

THE STUDY OF KISSING AHMEDABAD, India (AP) — Information Minister K.K. Shah has offered to organize seminars on kissing on the screen.

Shah told a meeting here that the government wants to ascertain the views of the public before permitting kissing in films.

Ann Landers

Answers Your Problems

DEAR ANN LANDERS: You have often stated that the girl is responsible for whatever happens to her on a date. I am sure you know what you are talking about most of the time, but there are exceptions to every rule. Please print my letter as an example of an exception.

Sixteen years ago I was a lusty young swinger. (In those days we called them "hot shots.") I had a yen for a girl who was just barely 15, three years my junior. She was an innocent, fresh-faced, luscious country bumpkin—and stacked. I asked her for a date and she was thrilled. After the movie we parked on a lonely road. I gave her a ridiculous line about how I had fallen for her months before and had been dreaming of her ever since. In almost no time at all I had my way. I realized promptly that it was her first sex experience and she didn't know what in the world it was all about.

Her only question when I saw her to the door was, "Does this mean we are going steady?" I replied, "No, it doesn't." She broke down and wept and slammed the door with me on the outside.

I never asked her for a date after that because I was too guilt-ridden. When we met in the halls at school I couldn't even look at her. Dozens of times I wanted to go to her and say, "I'm sorry," but I couldn't bring myself to do it. Sixteen years have passed and I still can't erase the memory of that girl's frightened, tear-stained face. I am writing in the hope that this letter will prove that it isn't always the girl who decides. Sometimes a smooth-talking, older fellow can take advantage of an innocent young thing.—ONE WHO DID

DEAR ONE WHO DID: Thank you for your letter, but my statement still stands. You didn't chloroform the girl. She should have had the sense to say no. I feel sorry for the poor thing but she was stupid and weak and she paid a big price.

DEAR ANN LANDERS: My brother and his wife have two adorable daughters, five and seven years of age. I love my little nieces as if they were my own children. They love me, too.

Last year my brother and his wife were divorced. He is very resentful and has been trying to get even with his wife by not paying her the support money she desperately needs. Because of this she will not let me see my nieces. Her reasoning is that if I get lonesome enough I will give her the support money myself or put pressure on my brother so he will come through with it.

I have told my sister-in-law this is unfair. She says she has to try everything she can think of because she needs the money to live on and "anything goes." Your opinion is wanted.—ALMA

DEAR ALMA: The poor woman's antics are frightfully kinky. If she wants to have her ex-husband put in jail for failing to support his children she can do it. But she should not penalize you. I hope she will see this and reconsider. Not only is your sister-in-law being unfair to you, but to her children as well.

CONFIDENTIAL TO WHAT DO I SAY NOW?: How about "Goody-bye"? This woman is taking you for all you're worth, and so far you've been worth about 20 grand, sucker.

NAMESVILLE
FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — Travelers in Kentucky may wonder at the appropriateness of the names of communities they drive through.

Oddville is far from Ordinary, as might be expected, and Wisdom is the next thing to Freedom. Yet, not much separates Fearsville from Paradise and South is north of Sweden.

The Bluegrass State's Sunrise is in the north, it has only one Shoulderblade and its Pride is nowhere near a fall. And Eighty Eight is on KY 90.

And if you get too confused, there is a Relief not far from a Gimlet.

Hints From Heloise

Removal Of Lint

DEAR HELOISE:

For ladies who cannot remove lint from dark corduroy: Wash and allow to dry slowly and while the article is still slightly damp, just brush it with a clothes brush. All of the lint will come off. This works like magic every time.

It is very important that the clothing be damp when trying to remove the lint because lint really sticks after corduroy is dry.

Helen Ciarca

Believe me, gals, it works. But better yet — is nylon net. There's that word again!

Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

My children don't like their summer shorts and shirts starched. So when I'm ironing, I spray-starch just the front of the shirts and the seat of the pants (where the dirt usually gets ground in).

Dirt floats right out at next laundry time and they don't have the scratchy seams they would have if the garments were starched all over.

Mary Lasher

DEAR HELOISE:

To remove mascara from the outside of the tube, from a plastic cosmetic bag, or even an eyelash curler, use plain rubbing alcohol on a cotton ball or a folded-up facial tissue.

Grange Notes

Watson Grange met on Thursday, at 8:15 p.m. in the grange hall, with a total of forty-two persons present. The Youth Degree team conferred the third and fourth degrees on Mr. and Mrs. William Mathews and Renee Chapel.

A new ballot box was presented as gift from the Ackley Grange.

It was agreed to let the Daily Vacation Bible School use the downstairs grange room for its sessions, as the school house is no longer available. The DVBS will open on June 19 (Monday) and continue through June 2 (Thursday).

A report was given by Virginia Strom on the building fund total. Work will start on the new kitchen in the near future. The building committee was appointed to receive bids for excavating.

Cootiettes Make Plans For Summer Activities

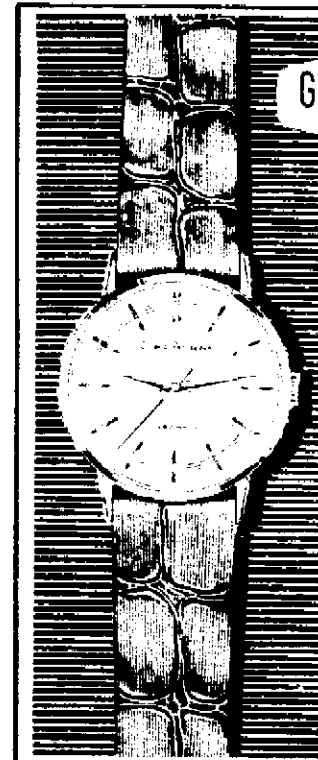

Only 55 cities in the world had populations exceeding one million, two decades ago. Today there are 120.

At a special meeting of the Hayseed Cootiette Club held in the VFW Post 631 post room, final plans were made for the summer season.

There will be a family picnic on Sunday, July 9, with the Military Order of Cooties, the time and place to be announced later. In the meantime all members will be contacted by telephone. Mr. and Mrs. Axel Nasman will be in charge of arrangements. The Cooties will furnish the meat and pop for the children, with the Cootiettes furnishing the coffee. The rest of the meal will be treasurers brought by the ladies.

Their immediate project is the selling of Citronella candles in beautiful holders. Any one interested in ordering now may call Ann Swanson at 723-1249.

There will not be a meeting in August, the next scheduled to take place on the first Wednesday in September.

If you'd like homeowner's protection that goes farther than most—that pays your mortgage when you can't...

...the man from Nationwide is on your side.

Come what may, we think a single plan should cover everything.

Most homeowner's insurance protects against fire, wind, and theft—but ignores one of the most frequent ways people lose their homes: foreclosure.

When a family loses its home, it's nearly always because the breadwinner becomes disabled or dies and the family can't keep up the mortgage payments.

That's why Nationwide created a special plan to protect your mortgage as well as your house.

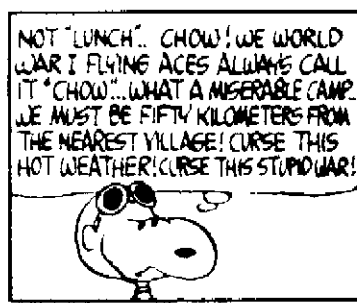

Nationwide's Security Plan for Homeowners actually gives you three policies: life insurance that protects your mortgage if you die; health insurance that protects your mortgage if you're disabled; fire, wind, theft, and liability insurance.

To get such complete protection, you'd normally have to go to more than one agent. The man from Nationwide offers a plan that gives you three policies in one plan from one man—even lets you pay in one check.

TELEPHONE TALK
by ROBERT DILKS
Your telephone manager in Warren

MINI RATES

Everything seems to be going up these days . . . hem-lines, the cost of living . . . but not the cost of phoning. Early this year we reduced our rates on a wide variety of services and equipment, including residence extensions, supplemental equipment, color phones, and other special services. We aim to provide the best possible service at the lowest possible cost. That's why your telephone service is one of the biggest bargains around.

SOLD FOR A SONG . . . Recently a lady wanted to buy a canary, so she looked in the Yellow Pages under "Pet Shops." Calling a dealer, she asked if he had canaries that could sing well. The dealer put one of his birds next to the phone for a solo. After a couple of songs, the lady said "That was beautiful, send him over."

AROUND THE CLOCK . . . It happens very rarely, but suppose your telephone does go on the blink. Then it's comforting to know that you'll be taken care of in a jiffy . . . and, of course, without extra charge. For your telephone company's Repair Service is in business 24 hours a day. Just get to another phone and call Repair Service. You'll find the number in the Pink Pages of your phone book. If it's late at night, though, please be patient. Our man may need an extra bit of time to slip on his working clothes.

TELEPHONE PROVERBS . . . When calling friends to say hello, please don't mistake "zero" for the letter "O."

A WORKING PARTNERSHIP . . . Income and jobs created by economic activity are the main support of our way of life. The millions your telephone company pays to its employees, invests in expansion and improvements, and spends with other Pennsylvania companies for supplies and services—all these demonstrate that your phone company is a prime contributor to the economic health and strength of the state.

A VERY HIGH JINX . . . A rash of wrong numbers had been harassing the people of Chester, England. Phones rang constantly and erratically. When someone answered, only silence followed. After months of investigation, telephone men traced the trouble to the city zoo. George the Giraffe had been licking the wires stretched across his enclosure and short circuiting all the phones in the area. Raising the poles four feet put temptation out of reach.

Vive the INNOVATORS

Now Gas has taken the muss and fuss out of barbecues. In its place Gas heated ceramic briquettes emit infra-red rays for perfect barbecuing—same charcoal flavor without the charcoal. Another innovation, the Climate Controlled home has become a reality. A simple Gas flame tames winter's tantrums and summer's torrid temperatures. Already, many of the nation's shopping and apartment complexes use Natural Gas for controlling their indoor climate as well as generating their own electrical power. Soon the innovators will have perfected the Natural Gas Fuel Cell, a device which will Climate Control your home as well as supply all your energy requirements. Today's innovations are tomorrow's way of life. When it comes to innovation, Gas makes the big difference. Vive la différence.
